ABSTRACT

Title : THE UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICE OF DIGITAL STORYTELLING AMONG EFL STUDENTS

Writer : Shofiya Laila Alghofariyah

Student Number : 1603046127

This study was conducted based on the importance of understanding and practice in learning. This study aims to describe the understanding and practice of digital storytelling among EFL students at Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School. This research is field research in a qualitative approach by conducting semi-structured interviews to get data and then analyzing using the Milles and Huberman model, an interactive technique. It was validated through triangulation techniques, namely observation and documentation. Six male and six female students who had created digital storytelling were selected by purposive sampling to be participants based on specialization class, gender, and English skill level. The findings showed that students understood digital storytelling well, except for the storyboard. In terms of practice, students repeatedly recorded their voices to emphasize their speaking skills. English students found difficulties in using technology, while photography-videography students found it in writing storylines and recording sound. The same challenges were also encountered by those not interested in either. Meanwhile, students who worked in groups found it difficult to organize the team.

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this chapter is to explain in more detail the background of the research, which also serves as a broad summary of the topics covered in this study. It also elaborates on the rationale for the topic chosen based on earlier research. The research question, objective of the study, rationale for selecting the topic, scope of the study, and pedagogical implications are all included in this chapter.

A. Background of the Research

The discussion on EFL learners will not be separated from their difficulties and challenges. Shen and Chiu's survey findings showed that most EFL students believed that psychological issues, such as "nervousness" and "fear of making mistakes," were the biggest obstacles to speaking English (Shen & Chiu, 2019). While in writing skills, conclusions show that limited language competency, sinister structure organization, L1 impact, writing anxiety, a lack of ideas, and issues with grammar, vocabulary, and syntax, in particular, are the main issues with EFL learners' writing (Astuti, 2022).

By seeing the problems above, it is necessary to have an appropriate learning strategy to cover EFL learner problems. In this digital era, the use of technology is, of course, beneficial for EFL learners. Lee and Hsieh's study suggests that modern EFL students, whether they speak L1 or L2, may feel more at ease with digital communication than with traditional offline approaches (Lee & Chen Hsieh, 2019).

One of the modern strategies for EFL learning is digital storytelling. Digital storytelling has a significant potential that may become an educational model for the present era (Moradi & Chen, 2019). Hava's findings indicate that digital storytelling could be a powerful and helpful tool that can be applied in educational settings to assist students' language and digital skills development (Hava, 2021). It combines graphics, sounds, recorded audio narration, music, and video to demonstrate information. So it covers all students' learning styles starting from audio, visual, and audio-visual learning.

Digital storytelling is very beneficial for students' digital literacy skills. As Jason Ohler has said below:

"Digital literacy is essential in the age of information technology, and digital storytelling is an effective tool in developing students' digital literacy, including their skills in understanding, analyzing and creating digital stories." (Ohler, 2016).

There are several studies reveal the impact of DST on English learning. Eissa found that the learner's problem in speaking English can be helped by applying DST as a pedagogy. Using DST strategies and the traditional way of teaching adult EFL learners at a particular university can develop learners' vocabulary and motivate them to work cooperatively. They also learn how to use proper grammar and enrich their new vocabulary. Moreover, the learners also improve their speaking skills by mastering stress, tone, and intonation (Mohamed Salama Eissa, 2019).

Mirza's investigation result for Lebanese University students stated that creating DST is an enjoyable and educational activity they want to repeat. The students also feel more confident because they can improve their pronunciation, organizational, technical, research, and presentation skills. They enjoy this assignment until they have 16 videos uploaded to YouTube. In the social aspect, students can share their work online with their friends and other English speakers globally (Mirza, 2020).

On improving writing skills, Tarigan and Liana proved that digital storytelling significantly improves students' scores in writing descriptive text (Shasqia, 2020). Besides that, Shasqia stated that students at junior high school can improve their writing skills in a narrative text through DST. Using DST, students can be more creative in creating a story in a narrative text. (Erikson Tarigan, 2018)

Digital storytelling could assess students' reading and listening comprehension. Students could master reading comprehension through entertaining media which attracts their attention. Listening comprehension was achieved through playing the videos so intensively. Students were asked to hear so attentively. By implementing digital storytelling, students have an opportunity to speak English in a non-threatening way because they can edit their spoken text. (Syafryadin et al., 2019)

A study in Malaysia's primary schools also proved that tablet digital storytelling applications can motivate learners to learn speaking skills. This is because of the presence of multimedia features integrated into the application. They are animation, voiceover narration, hyperlinked vocabularies, and multimodal glosses. The observation result stated that the learners improved their speaking skills by repeating the pronunciation and memorizing spelling.(Chiew et al., 2018)

Indonesian EFL teachers observed that DST-based teaching and learning activities increase students' active engagement in the classroom (Ribeiro, 2016). It is, of course, quite encouraging because students become engaged in developing their English skills. To achieve the desired goal, of course, it must be accompanied by good knowledge from students about digital storytelling. Besides that, the practice of applying proper digital storytelling will improve the output of EFL students. Then it is necessary to conduct a study to find out the understanding and practice of digital storytelling among EFL learners.

students attended different specialization classes. The specialization classes related to the study are the photographic-videography and English classes. According to the teacher of the photographic-videography class, Mrs. Ida, several students in the photographic-video graphics class still had low English skills. It is evidenced by the poor English skill mastered by the students so that the teacher has to explain repeatedly using the mother tongue. To join the class, students must have sufficient English skills.

At the same time, the students were also assigned to make a digital storytelling video in English for the English teacher, resulting in an exciting blend of English and digital skills. So, the researcher intends to conduct a study on all of the grade students of Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School who have created digital storytelling.

Considering that digital storytelling has many advantages on students' literacy skills, as explained by previous research, the researcher intends to find a bright spot in the understanding and practice of digital storytelling in EFL students. It is because there is no previous research that discusses these two things.

The aims of this study are two folds. First, to describe Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School students' understanding of digital storytelling to achieve a conceptualization of digital storytelling. Second, to investigate students' digital storytelling practices in to investigate students' digital storytelling practices to find out how the practices can improve their linguistic skills and what challenges they encounter.

B. The Questions of the Research

Based on the background of the research above, the question of the research are:

1. How is EFL students' understanding of digital storytelling?
2. How is the practice of creating digital storytelling among EFL students?

C. The Objective of the Research

Based on the problems mentioned above, the objective of this research are:

1. To describe the understanding of digital storytelling among EFL students

2. To describe the practice of digital storytelling among EFL students

D. Reason for Choosing the Topic

The reasons for choosing the topic are:

1. Digital storytelling is one medium that can cover all English skills simultaneously, such as speaking, writing, reading, and listening.
2. Students are more interested in the use of digital technology
3. There is a photography and videography specialization class at Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School, but some students who take the course have low English skills.
4. No previous research discusses students' understanding and practice of digital storytelling.

E. The Focus of The Research

The focus of this research can be described as follow:

1. This is a descriptive qualitative study on the understanding and practice of the process of creating digital storytelling in English subjects by EFL students.

2. The participants of this study were EFL students of Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School who created a digital storytelling
3. It focuses on students' understanding and practice in creating digital storytelling in English subjects.

F. Pedagogical Significance

The researcher seems that the findings of this study will be advantageous for teaching and learning English, particularly for students, teachers, the next researcher, the school, and the reader, even though it is an insignificant contribution to society.

a. English Teacher

The teacher will benefit from the findings of this research. The writer thinks that the study will use and improve media in English language instruction, especially when applying digital storytelling as a teaching tool to increase student interest and focus on learning.

b. Students

The writer hopes that digital storytelling may be used as a medium for English learning, helping students to improve their English proficiency and develop critical thinking, creativity, and social intelligence skills.

c. Next researchers

This research is expected to serve as a guide for researchers who are conducting other studies on teaching media, especially in terms of digital storytelling, by providing references and supporting data.

CHAPTER II

LITERATURE REVIEW

This chapter aims to cover the theoretical basis of the study. Digital storytelling, practical learning, and student understanding are all concepts covered in this chapter. This chapter's theoretical framework discusses the academic solutions to the research issues and the theoretical foundations.

A. Previous Research

There are several previous research which has the same subject, object, or teaching technique, but in this research, the researcher takes some of the research related to the study:

1. The research was conducted by Nadezhda Chubko, Julia E. Morris, David H. McKinnon, Eileen V. Slater, and Geoffrey W. Lummis (2020) entitled Digital Storytelling as a Disciplinary Literacy Enhancement Tool for EFL Students.

This study aimed to investigate how digital storytelling (DST) educational technology intervention in a STEM-A context affected students learning English as a foreign language's (EFL) process of acquiring disciplinary literacy.

This research used multiple case studies as its method. The researcher collected data by written responses to an astronomy diagnostic test (ADT), which were coded against the observed learning outcome structure (SOLO) and analyzed using analysis of variance (ANOVA) with repeated measures at the time of testing. The study's subject was 30 Kyrgyz students between 12 and 16.

The findings indicated that the DST intervention had a beneficial impact on EFL students' learning of astronomy-related disciplinary literacy. By showing how the DST teaching intervention could bridge the achievement gap between EFL and non-EFL students in disciplinary literacy acquisition in STEM fields, the research contributed to the body of knowledge on educational technology (Chubko et al., 2020).

The similarity of the research above namely the researcher explained the effect of digital storytelling on teenage EFL students. The difference was the research methodology. I used qualitative descriptive, while the research above used multiple study cases.

2. A research was conducted by Ayşegül Okumuş (2020) entitled The Perceptions and Preferences of 8th Grade Students in Digital Storytelling in English.

This study explores eighth-grade students' opinions on how technology is integrated into English classes via digital storytelling. While finding out the subjects and characters that students prefer for their digital stories is another goal. The issues of this study were 15 students in a public school. The data was gathered through pre-surveys, digital storytelling, and post-surveys.

The study was done over a month, during which five different digital stories were produced. The qualitative and quantitative analysis results showed that participants' opinions toward using digital storytelling in English lessons were favorable both before and after implementation, with little distinction between pre-and post-test results.

The participants generally expressed an interest in using digital storytelling since they thought it was inspiring, boosted language learning, and supported collaboration. The topics were adrenaline, love, sadness, friendship, and fear. Typically, the characters were female heroes. The implication is that since digital storytelling is a fun approach to practicing language skills, it may be used for speaking, listening, grammar, vocabulary, and writing tasks (Okumuş, 2020).

The similarity of the research above namely the researcher used qualitative analysis to know the effect of digital storytelling on EFL learners. The difference was the specific purpose. I want to see the understanding and practice of digital storytelling among EFL students while the research above explained students' perceptions and preferences in digital storytelling.

3. A research was conducted by Cici Nurmayanti (2022) entitled The Effect of Digital Storytelling on Students' Speaking Skill Through Vlognow of The Third Grade at SMP Negeri 6 Siak Hulu.

This study aimed to determine whether third-graders at SMP Negeri 6 Siak Hulu's VlogNow (VN) significantly impacted their speaking abilities. This study's design was experimental, and it employed a quantitative methodology. Class IX1 and IX2 of the third grade at SMP Negeri 6 Siak Hulu served as the study's sample.

The researcher used digital storytelling using VlogNow to administer the pre-test at the first meeting and treatment at the following five sessions. Data from the study's pre-and post-tests were analyzed using the SPSS 24 version. The researcher concluded that digital storytelling through VlogNow significantly affected speaking ability at third Grade SMP Negeri 6 Siak Hulu (Nurmayanti, 2022).

The research above is similar to implementing digital storytelling to improve English language skills for EFL students. In comparison, the difference is in the research methodology used. I used descriptive qualitative, while the research above used experimental study.

4. A research was conducted by Nikki Leres Mulyati (2021) entitled The Effect of Digital Storytelling to Foster Students' Speaking Ability in Describing People.

This study aimed to know whether there is or not an effect of digital storytelling on students speaking skills in describing people. It used the experimental method in a quantitative approach. The samples were 56 students in seventh grade with purposive sampling. The researcher chose the oral test as the research instrument. The result showed the conclusion that the use of digital storytelling has the effect of fostering speaking ability in describing people (Mulyati, 2021).

The similarity with this research is that both results showed that digital storytelling affects students speaking ability. In contrast, the difference is the method used.

B. Literature review

1. Understanding

a. Definition of Understanding

Based on Chaplin's psychological dictionary, understanding is the process of comprehending meaning. In historical writing, an individual can understand the meaning (Chaplin, 2009).

According to Seifert, comprehension is the ability to use memorized knowledge more or less like what has been taught and under its intended use (Seifert, 2009).

While for Eko Putro Widoyoko, understanding or comprehension is the process of constructing meaning from learning messages, whether oral, written, or graphic, delivered through teaching, books, and other learning resources (Widoyoko, 2014).

And according to Martin, understanding can be said to the problem-solving, the use and transfer of knowledge (Long et al., 2011).

From the definitions above, it can be concluded that understanding is the ability to use memorized knowledge following its intended use, constructing meaning from learning messages, and understanding relationships between facts or concepts.

b. Levels of Understanding Understanding ability based on the level of sensitivity and degree of material absorption can be described into three classes: translation, interpretation, and extrapolation (Daryanto, 2010).

The first level is translation. The definition of translation does not simply mean the transfer of meaning from one language into another. But it can tell from an abstract conception into a symbolic model to make learning easier for people (Daryanto, 2010).

The second level is interpretation. This ability is broader than translation. It is the ability to recognize and understand. Interpreting can be done by connecting past knowledge with subsequent knowledge, linking the graph with the actual conditions that are described, as well as distinguishing what is and distinguishing between the main and not the main points in the discussion (Sudjana, 2014).

And the last level is extrapolation. It is different from translating and interpreting, but it is higher because it requires higher intellectual abilities so that a person is needed to see something written (Sudjana, 2014).

a. Process of Understanding

Speed of understanding is a constituent element of intelligence (Julian & Alfred, 2008). Understanding is developing an understanding of learning messages, whether spoken, written, or graphic, and communicated through education, literature, and other learning resources. If students can interpret the message they have been given, they are considered to understand.

The cognitive processes are classified into interpreting, modeling, classifying, summarizing, concluding, comparing, and explaining (Widoyoko, 2014).

The first process is interpreting. Interpreting occurs when students can convert information from one form to another. Interpreting involves converting words into other words, pictures from words, words into photos, numbers, etc. words, pictures from words, words into images, numbers into words, words into numbers, and so on. Into words, words into numbers, and so on. Other names for interpreting are translating, paraphrasing, describing, and clarifying.

The following process is modeling. It occurs when students give examples of a general concept or principle. Exemplification involves the process of identifying the general idea or principles. Other names exemplifying are illustrating and giving examples.

Classifying is the third process. The cognitive process of classifying occurs when students know that something (e.g., an example) belongs to a specific category (e.g., a concept or principle). Classifying involves detecting features or patterns corresponding to the sample and the idea or code. Other names for classifying are categorizing and grouping.

The fourth process is summarizing. It occurs when students develop one sentence that presents the information received or abstracts a theme. Summarizing involves translating information, for example, the meaning of a drama scene, and the process of abstracting the summary, the summary, for example, determining the theme or main points. Other names for summarizing are generalizing and abstracting.

Concluding is the following process. It includes the process of finding patterns in several examples. Concluding occurs when students can abstract a concept or principle that explains the models by looking at the characteristics of each sample and drawing connections between the process of inferring involves cognitive processes and comparing all samples. Other names for inference are extrapolating, interpolate, and predict.

After that, There is comparing. The cognitive process of comparing involves the operation of detecting similarities and differences between two or more objects, events, ideas, problems, or situations. Comparing also consists of the process of determining the relationship between two or more objects, events, or ideas that are presented. Other names for comparing are contrasting mapping and matching.

And the last is explaining. The cognitive process of explaining occurs when students can create and use cause-and-effect models in a system. This model can be derived from theory or based on research results or experience. Another name for explaining is modeling (Widoyoko, 2014).

2. Practice

a. Definition of Practice

Based on Oxford online dictionary, practice in improving skill perspective is doing an activity or training regularly to improve your skill. It can also be said that the time you spend doing this. Whereas in the perspective of ways of doing things, practice is a way of doing something that is the usual or expected way in a particular organization or situation (Oxford Online Dictionary, 2023).

Meanwhile, an explanation of the meaning of the practice method can be described through the opinions of figures related to the definition of practice. Syaiful Bahri Djamarah explained that "the practical method is used to show a process or how an object works related to the subject matter (Djamarah, 2000).

According to Ramayuli, the practical method in the teaching process is "a method or way of teaching that uses physical labor or the operation of equipment or objects to explain something teaching material" (Ramayuli, 2005).

Muhammad Zein explained that the practice method is a method in which a teacher, student, or other parties deliberately asked by himself shows all learners a process of doing something (Zein, 1995).

As a result, the practice method is a teaching strategy where implementation is done before displaying or practicing what the teacher or the students may exhibit under the material delivered.

b. Purpose of Practice

Each learning method has a different purpose. Teachers can use various ways according to the conditions and situations of the learners. Practical learning methods aim to develop learners' essential qualifications and competencies (Wiguna et al., 2016).

The learners' essential qualifications include personal skills such as flexibility, readiness to take responsibility, creativity, and enthusiasm to learn. Also, social skills include readiness to cooperate, communicate, cope, and learn. While learners' competencies include vocational competencies, method competence of practical teaching, and social competence in willingness to collaborate, communicate, solve problems, and work together in a group (Wiguna et al., 2016).

c. Steps of Practice

According to Bandura, practical learning consists of the attention, retention, production, and motivation phases. In the attentional stage, the teacher models a particular activity in front of the students. Meanwhile, students observe the teacher's skill in doing this. After that, the teacher and students discuss the observation results to find the students' shortcomings and difficulties in attending to the steps of the activity delivered by the teacher (Trianto, 2009).

The retention phase is filled with teacher activities explaining the structure of the activity steps observed by students to show specific measures that have been presented. The next phase is production. In this phase, learners prepare their activity steps according to the steps that have been modeled. This activity is also called guided practice. The teacher provides guidance and direction if learners find it difficult (Trianto, 2009).

And the last is the motivation phase. In this phase, students present the results of the activity witnessed by the teacher and other students. Other learners are also allowed to convey their observations of the presentation (Trianto, 2009).

3. Digital Storytelling

a. Definition of Digital Storytelling

Digital storytelling can be defined as the process of making short films with narratives and multimedia elements (such as audio and video) that aim to evoke strong feelings in the viewer (Amaliah et al., 2022). As the name suggests, digital storytelling is images and graphics, text, sound, and web publishing all rolled into one. It covers all the student's learning styles, starting from visual, audio, and audio-visual.

Digital stories, like traditional storytelling, focus on particular topics and contain a specific viewpoint (Nair & Yunus, 2021). Suppose traditional storytelling shows the storyteller's voice, gestures, and mimics. In that case, "digital storytelling" includes computer-based images, texts, recorded voice narration, and video clips.

Digital storytelling is not very new in practice, although it emphasizes computer technology greatly. A well-known digital storytelling pioneer, Joe Lambert headed the Centre for Digital Storytelling 33 years ago. This organization aided children and adults in developing and sharing personal narratives via creative writing and digital media technology (Nair & Md Yunus, 2022).

b. Elements of Digital Storytelling

To be an exciting work, digital storytelling has several elements that, if complete, will make it a beautiful and valuable work. They are the story's overall purpose, the narrator's point of view, dramatic questions, choice of content, clarity of sound, stages of narration, soundtrack that gives meaning, image quality, economy of story details, and use of grammar (Yuliana & Wantoro, 2017).

The elements above are helpful to consider while creating digital storytelling. If one element is not good, it will affect the results of digital storytelling, so it is not as expected.

c. The Process of Producing Digital Storytelling

The first step is finding the idea. In this stage, the creator determines what ideas will be conveyed to the audience. It is related to the creator's goal of creating digital storytelling. After that is doing research/exploration by collecting accurate materials on the ideas raised by the creator.

A creator must make a storyline and storyboard to get conceptualized and measurable results. The storyline is the flowing narrative of the story. The storyline contains the storyline accompanied by the narration text that the narrator will speak. The storyline will be supported by a storyboard that illustrates each story frame. The storyboard contains a complete design of digital storytelling, such as duration, images/video used in each scene, soundtrack, and others.

The next stage is the collection of images/audio/videos that can be obtained by downloading from the sources provided or creating your own for originality. And the materials that have been collected will be combined and harmonized between images, narration, and sound. Creators can use any editing application, such as power point, KineMaster, Filmora, etc.

After everything is collected in digital stories, the next step is distributing it to the public in a forum or through official websites and social media. And the last stage of creating digital storytelling is to manage public feedback and input for improvement at the beginning of the next step (Yuliana & Wantoro, 2017).

d. The Advantages of Using Digital Storytelling

There are several advantages of using digital storytelling in learning English. It can accommodate various learning styles (Nurul et al., 2017). There are some significant types of learning styles. They are as follows: auditory, visual, and kinesthetic. To get good results in learning, most people apply these three learning styles (Syofyan & Siwi, 2018). Digital storytelling covers all types because it combines images, videos, sounds, and texts.

Digital storytelling also gives every student opportunity as much as possible to train their speaking ability before they record it (Putri & Ardi, 2013). When students have a project to create a digital storytelling file, they will practice speaking repeatedly until the results are worth recording. It allows them to improve their speaking pronunciation and fluency.

Besides affecting pronunciation and fluency, digital storytelling improves vocabulary, grammar mastery, and learners' confidence (Wahyuni et al., 2018). Wahyuni, Joko, and Teguh stated that before action research, learners lacked vocabulary. But after action research, students' vocabulary increased. When learners observe a digital storytelling video, they find a new language and automatically look for its meanings and how to pronounce it.

Also, before action research, learners produced wrong sentences, and after that, their grammar understanding was improved. It is because they composed a list of questions for interviews in preparing a digital storytelling project investigation. The teacher checked the accuracy of the sentences they formed. This part trains them to make correct sentences.

Digital storytelling also increases learners' confidence in presenting oral descriptions. Before action research, learners could not speak confidently, but after that, they became confident. The process of gathering information through interview make them practice English speaking. They interviewed the classroom so they could communicate freely. It could increase learners' confidence in speaking English. Moreover, learners got experience in using English for real communication.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

This chapter aims to discuss in more detail how the research was conducted. It includes the research design, participants, data collection, procedure, and data analysis technique.

A. Research Design

Based on the problem and the objectives above, it is considered that the research design that was suitable for this research was a qualitative approach. The type of research used in this study is field research. In this case, the researcher revealed what happens naturally to the research subject.

As Creswell said that qualitative research is also called as interpretive research. It means the researcher engages in an ongoing and intensive experience with the participants to discover the problems and practices that occur (Creswell & Creswell, 2018).

B. Research Participant

This research participant was the Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School students who created digital storytelling videos. To determine the sample, the researcher used the purposive sampling method because not all models have criteria that match the phenomenon under study that was researched.

Purposive sampling is a technique where TREE (Teacher Researcher Educator-Educator) decides who is most likely to help provide information about constructs (Griffiee, 2012). So, the researcher chose knowledgeable and available persons as the respondents.

The sampling criteria determined by the researcher were the Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School students who have created digital storytelling based on gender, specialization class, and English proficiency level from limited to very good based on the subject teacher consideration.

Therefore, the researcher selected twelve students from thirty-six students who met the criteria as sample respondents. They are six male students and six female students. Four students joined the English specialization class, four students joined the photography-videography specialization class, and four others did not join either.

C. Data Collection Technique

The researcher applied semi-structured interviews as the data collection technique. It is an interview technique where the list of questions can be developed to facilitate the coding and categorization. At the same time, observation and documentation were used as supporting data.

The data instrument researcher used were interview guidelines, observation guidelines, and documentation files in the form of digital storytelling videos made by students, storyline paper sheets, images of students practicing creating digital storytelling, and interview recordings.

D. Research Procedure

First, the researcher gathered information about participants who fulfilled the criteria to become respondents. The researcher learned that Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School students received a practical assignment to create digital storytelling.

Second, the researcher asked permission from the school to conduct research. On June 8-10, 2023, the researcher observed students working on assignments to create digital storytelling videos.

Third, two days later, the researcher interviewed the students who were sampled on the recommendation of the English teacher verbally. They were twelve students consisting of six boys and six girls. Four students were interested in the English language skills class, four in the photography-videography class, and four did not join either. The researcher also collected documentation through videos, photos, and storyline paper sheets.

The researcher then transcribed the interview results using an online transcribing application, the good-tape app. The transcribed data was then reduced to make it easier to categorize. After being reduced, the data is presented as a narrative so that the reader quickly understands it.

Finally, the data was analyzed in more depth to obtain answers to the research questions and also to find new findings.

E. Data Analysis Technique

After collecting the data, the researcher chose the Huberman and Miles research model, namely the interactive model. This interactive model consists of three main things: reduction, display, and verification or conclusion drawing (Idrus, 2009).

The interview data were transcribed in written form with a good-tape app and then reduced to be easily categorized. After being reduced, the data was analyzed more deeply to find answers about the understanding and practice of creating digital storytelling based on differences in students' interests and English language proficiency levels.

To test the data's trustworthiness, the researcher used triangulation techniques. That is by comparing the interview data with the observation and documentation data.

One way to validate an interview measurement is to compare the interview measure with other measures that have been tested to be valid. It is known as 'convergent validity'. If the two steps agree, it can be verified that the validity of the interview is good (Cohen et al., 2007).

CHAPTER IV

RESEARCH FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

This chapter presents data analysis related to the data that has been examined in the research. This chapter consists of two parts. The first part is the research findings. This section presents data regarding the respondents' understanding of digital storytelling and how they practice creating it. The second part is the discussion which consists of comparing and contrasting this research with previous research, the strengths and limitations of the study, and the implications of this research for English language learning.

A. Findings

Based on the interview result, the researcher found the fact about the student's understanding and practice of digital storytelling. This data displays the reduction results of the interview data, which is presented in a narrative form.

1. Students Understanding of Digital Storytelling

Based on the interview results, the researcher found that most respondents were new to digital storytelling after being assigned to practice creating digital storytelling videos. Of the twelve respondents, only two respondents have known it for a long time. However, the respondents stated that they have understood the concept of digital storytelling for a long time but only recently knew that the name is digital storytelling.

There were two kinds of answers regarding the respondents' understanding of digital storytelling. First, it is a video or movie with dubbing. Second, it is storytelling delivered through digital media.

Most respondents have watched digital storytelling through YouTube, although other types of social media exist, such as Instagram, WhatsApp, TikTok, and Pinterest. Meanwhile, three respondents have never seen digital storytelling on social media.

After the practice of creating digital storytelling, almost all respondents understood the elements of digital storytelling well. Because they practiced directly, it was easy for them to remember the details.

Five respondents understood the storyline as a story plot with narration. Two respondents understood it as a video story plan. One person understood it as a draft script. Two did not know. As for the rest, only one person understood it as a script with a detailed story sequence.

Regarding the storyboard, there were only three respondents who understood it well. They explained that storyboards are more detailed than storylines. It contains the plot, photos/videos used, music, sound recordings, how to shoot, and the duration of each scene. While the rest of the respondents stated, they did not know about storyboards.

Almost all respondents could explain the soundtrack well in the section on understanding the soundtrack. They understood it as music, songs, or sounds accompanying the video. However, there was one respondent who understood it as a voiceover recording.

In terms of the steps of creating digital storytelling, the respondents had a good understanding. The respondents can explain the core steps from finding ideas, conducting research, writing narratives, collecting photos/videos, recording sound, editing, and sharing the results of digital storytelling creation. However, only three respondents mentioned creating a storyline and storyboard.

Regarding the hardware used, the respondents were well-informed. They mentioned several types of hardware, such as mobile phones, cameras, laptops, tripods, microphones, paper, book notes, and pens. Respondents' understanding of software was also excellent. They mentioned several editing applications, such as CapCut, KineMaster, InShot, Filmora, Canva, AlecMotion, Viva Video, Video Editor, Lightroom, Photoshop, and Premiere.

The respondents' understanding of social media, which usually features digital storytelling, is also perfect. They mentioned YouTube, Whatsapp, Instagram, Facebook, Twitter, TikTok, and Telegram. Regarding feedback, most of them said that the benefit of getting or giving feedback is for evaluation. In addition, it is also a spirit booster and to get inspiration.

2. Students' Practice of Digital Storytelling

In creating digital storytelling, some respondents did it in groups or individually. Respondents who made individually did all the steps themselves, while respondents who worked in groups only did specific steps, namely as a scriptwriter, voiceover, cameraman, and editor.

The elements used by the respondents also varied. There are a theme, image, video, voice recording, back sound, narration or script, figure, and cameraman.

They use several hardware devices, such as cell phones, laptops, paper, and pens. The respondents used several apps, such as KineMaster, CapCut, Canva, and InShot, for video editing. CapCut was the most widely used app by the respondents. Unfortunately, two respondents knew nothing about the editing apps they used as they only carried out and paid attention to the tasks according to the group agreement.

The teacher determined the topic of the digital storytelling video, and then the respondents did research, but some did not because they already understood the issue. The respondents explored or researched by browsing Google and YouTube, discussing with friends, or directly visiting the location.

In creating the storyline, the respondents determined the plot and then wrote the narration with the help of translation applications, namely google translate, and deepL. Some translate directly and only check through a dictionary or Google translate when they don't know specific vocab. The respondents paid attention to the use of grammar by asking the teacher. Some did not pay attention to grammar because they did not understand and did not take part in writing the storyline.

There were only three respondents who stated that they designed storyboards. The others did not, reasoning that it was too complicated, so they chose to go straight to execution.

Some respondents repeated the exercise to get a good sound recording until it was nearly perfect. To ensure pronunciation, respondents asked for help from teachers and friends or matched it through google translate. Some also checked by listening to themselves. It is undoubtedly perfect for practicing their speaking skills. Unfortunately, because of the division of labor, some do not know anything about it because they feel that recording sound is not their job.

Respondents mainly chose to record themselves to obtain images and videos. Others downloaded from Google, YouTube, or their social media. As for selecting a soundtrack, they chose music that they liked or that matched their video. Some did not know because they just left the task to the editor.

Ten out of twelve respondents utilize Instagram to upload their creations. Others chose Whatsapp and Telegram. Unfortunately, there is one respondent who has not uploaded his creations. By sharing their products on social media, they get feedback from netizens through comments. Two respondents received comments. The words were to pay more attention to subtitles and pronunciation. The other ten did not receive any comments.

The challenges faced by the respondents were diverse. The first was the problem of pronunciation while recording the voice. The respondents admitted having difficulty speaking skills due to lack of practice. Therefore, they repeatedly practiced until they were excellent before recording.

The second challenge is mastering grammar and vocabulary. Although the teacher had explained that the tenses used in this assignment were simple present tense, there were still some mistakes that the respondents made in terms of using the tenses. They also asked the teacher to ensure the tenses they used were correct.

Third is the problem of translation. Most respondents were not able to translate independently. They have to utilize the help of google translate or deepL for translation purposes.

The fourth challenge is skills in technology utilization. Some respondents admitted having difficulties taking pictures and videos, editing, posting on social media, and getting a signal. They acknowledged that they struggled because they were not used to it and did not know the techniques. This difficulty did not apply to respondents who attended the photography-videography specialization class.

And the last challenge is the organization of the team. The respondents admitted that it was difficult to get together because this task was carried out outside of class hours. It was also evidenced by the fact that a group member did not know about one of the steps because he only played a role in his job without paying attention to other members' jobs.

Overall, the digital storytelling creation practice of Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School students can run well. However, some things are less than optimal, as listed in the discussion of the challenges faced by the respondents. Individual tasks make each child responsible for all processes. They can feel all the steps of making digital storytelling. While group assignments make students only carry out one of the steps that become their job without paying attention and doing other steps.

The students also depend too much on instant things when it comes to script writing. It is evidenced by the use of translation applications, which almost all respondents use. Of course, actions like this cannot train students' abilities in writing.

B. Discussion

Previous research by Okumuş stated the implication that digital storytelling is an exciting approach according to the student's perceptions. So it may be used for speaking, listening, grammar, vocabulary, and writing activities (Okumuş, 2020).

In this study, the researchers selected respondents from different backgrounds of interest and levels of their English language skills. The findings showed that students had difficulties creating digital storytelling based on their grinding class.

Photography-videography classes have difficulties in speaking and writing. English classes have a problem editing and taking pictures. Those who are not interested in both have different challenges.

Fitriyani revealed that digital storytelling can improve students' writing skills in a descriptive text (Fitriyani, 2022). The researchers found that the student's writing skills did not improve because they depended too much on translator applications. They prefer an instant path to translate their storyline, except for the students who follow the English curriculum.

There are two strengths of this research. The first is that the study was conducted with respondents who had different interests, namely in photography-videography, English, and who had no interest in either. Secondly, the study also looked at students with varying English skill levels.

The understanding of students with low skills from the English language specialization about digital storytelling is less than optimal. This one student did not understand the definition, elements, storyline, and storyboard of digital storytelling well. At the same time, two students with a medium level and one student with a high level can understand the concept of digital storytelling optimally.

The understanding of one photography-videography specialization student with intermediate skills in the definition of digital storytelling is appropriate. While one low, medium, and high-level student had a sense of the meaning that was not correct. All levels of photography-videography students did not understand the concept of storyline and storyboard well. While in the elements, steps, use of technology, sharing, and feedback are good.

The two mid-level students not interested in English and photography-videography classes did not understand the definition of digital storytelling well.

Meanwhile, one low and one high-level student understood the definition well. All levels of students did not understand storyboarding at all. Meanwhile, the other aspects, namely elements, storyline, steps, use of technology, sharing, and feedback, were monitored to be safe.

In practice, English language specialization students do not have significant difficulties in writing storylines and voice recordings. However, they have problems operating editing applications and taking pictures and videos. This is because they are used to practicing writing and speaking skills and are not used to driving cell phones for editing and taking photos and videos.

Students specializing in photography-videography find translating challenging, so they mostly ask for help from translation applications such as google translate and deepL. This certainly does not train their writing skills. The good news is that although they have difficulty with pronunciation for voice recording, they are willing to practice speaking repeatedly until their pronunciation is good.

The practices carried out by the disinterested students in the two classes mentioned above showed different results and processes. The high-level students had an easier time with voice recording, and the intermediate and low-level students struggled.

What they had in common was that they also worked with editing.

A general problem with students working in groups was the specifics of the allocation of tasks. Because of this, students only did what they were assigned to do without learning and practicing for the other functions, so they did not go through the whole process of creating digital storytelling.

Of course, this study also has limitations. Due to the short period, the researcher could not know the impact of the practice of creating digital storytelling further on improving students' skills. Thus, this study can only answer questions about the level of understanding and how digital storytelling is practiced among EFL students at Nurul Furqon Natural Junior High School.

This study has three implications. The first implication is that digital storytelling creation practices can train students to organize teams. With this practice, students practice to engage in collaboration, communication, and synergies with peers.

Second, train students to have the skills to leverage technology in the digital age, such as the skills of taking pictures or videos, editing, and sharing on social media. Third, this can encourage students to improve their speaking skills by repeating the pronunciation.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

Although the students were just introduced to digital storytelling after getting a practical assignment from the teacher, their understanding of storytelling is quite good. It was proven by the respondents who could answer the questions correctly except for the storyboard because the students did not practice making it.

The students can achieve it well in practice, as evidenced by their digital storytelling work. However, the process did not run optimally because students were not compact in group work. Students only work and care about their job, so they do not master the steps of making digital storytelling.

Okumus' research states the implication that digital storytelling is an engaging approach according to students' perceptions. So it may be used for speaking, listening, grammar, vocabulary, and writing tasks (Okumus, 2020). But the researcher found the fact in the field that this practice only raised speaking and vocabulary skills. Students relied on online translation apps for writing and grammar, so this attitude did not improve their skills.

This finding aligns with Nurmayanti's research, which mentioned that digital storytelling through VlogNow significantly affects speaking skills (Nurmayanti, 2022).

Students have different challenges based on their grinding classes. English-language students face difficulties when it comes to editing and taking pictures. Students in the videography-photography class face difficulties regarding storyline writing and pronunciation before recording sound. High-level students who are not interested in both have trouble writing scripts and posting videos. Low and middle-level students have difficulties in pronunciation, writing, and editing.

B. Suggestion

Practical learning can run optimally if a suitable role exists between students, teachers, and supporting facilities. Therefore, researchers suggest that teachers should be more precise in providing guided practice, especially when writing scripts and compiling storyboards, so students' skills improve when carrying out practical tasks.

For students, the researcher suggests that students be more compact and learn from each other when doing tasks in groups so that each individual can understand and do all the steps of digital storytelling creation. The researcher also suggested that students should not rely too much on translator applications to practice writing skills that will be useful in the future.

The researcher suggests that subsequent researchers develop research on digital storytelling to improve writing skills because this is still a shortage in this study. In addition, the researcher also indicated that there should be research on the impact of storytelling watched by students on social media because students' lives now cannot be separated from social media. The researcher hopes that the projection of development in the process and results of English learning can continue.
